

THE NEW ATLANTIS

A JOURNAL OF TECHNOLOGY & SOCIETY

NUMBER 59 ~ SUMMER 2019

ESSAYS:

- The New Kinship Engineering 3
Brendan P. Foht on why three-parent babies are being created not to prevent disease but to manufacture genetic relationships
- In Search of Lost Time on YouTube 13
Laurence Scott on how the platform takes us to places where we ache to go again
- First, Take No Stand 22
Aaron Kheriaty shows how on assisted suicide, the medical profession ducks behind “neutrality”
- Crusoe at the Crossroads 37
Kirsten A. Hall on Robinson Crusoe, Lost, and why we keep returning to mysterious islands where science blurs with the supernatural
- Analog Anchors for the Online Adrift 57
Ian Marcus Corbin on how Moleskine sells durability to ephemeral selves
- NASA’s Next 50 Years 63
Robert Zubrin argues that a half-century after Apollo, it’s time for a real, and different, mission for our space agency
-

REVIEWS & RECONSIDERATIONS:

- Tell Him Something Pretty 68
Robert Herritt on Deadwood’s lowly view of reason
- Einstein in Athens 78
Benjamin Liebeskind on how modern physics is unwittingly echoing Aristotle, and still has much to learn from him
- All Activities Monitored 91
Jon Askonas on how military drone surveillance is quietly creeping into policing, business, and everyday life
-